

RACE WAR SPREADS

Violent battles in Yorkshire and London signal collapse of 'multi-cultural' experiment in Britain

LAST MONTH our main front-page story dealt with a major outbreak of race warfare in Wolverhampton, and the manner in which this was hushed up by the mass media. This month our focus is on further racial disturbances in Yorkshire and London. As with the earlier trouble in Wolverhampton, there has likewise been a deliberate attempt to hide the full scale of the trouble from the British public. While these disturbances have not gone unreported, the media attention given them has been disproportionately small considering their scale and the trouble they have caused. This has particularly been the case with the London disturbances, of which very little has been said either in the papers or on TV.

For several weeks there has been ongoing racial conflict in the West Bowling district of Bradford, involving young Whites and Asians. There seems to have been some confusion as to which side began the trouble. Asians claim that Whites started it when they set out on a rampage in a largely Asian area of West Bowling, smashing the windows of Asian homes. Whatever the facts of the matter, Asians subsequently raided a mainly white area armed with metal bars and cricket bats. When police were called in, a mob of about 130 young Asians attacked them with stones. Extraordinarily, no arrests were made — paralleling the trouble in Wolverhampton reported last month, when police made no arrests of black youths.

These disturbances in West Bowling, Bradford, followed on closely from one occurring the previous month, when thousands of Asians went on a demonstration march in the city against author Salman Rushdie, demanding that British laws be changed so as to render illegal his book, The Satanic Verses. Large numbers of these Asians became involved in scuffles with the police, resulting in 54 of them being arrested. The march incensed many local Whites, and some were involved in running battles with the Asians.

On the 24th June, the British National Party held a rally in another part of Yorkshire, Dewsbury. This was followed by some extremely violent rioting by a mainly Asian mob. After the mob had failed in its attempt to prevent the rally taking place (they want to decide who in Britain is to be allowed to hold meetings as well as who is to be allowed to write books!), they went on a rampage in the town, attacking targets that could never remotely have had anything to do with the BNP. There was a massed assault on the Scarborough public house, with terrified white customers having to erect protective barriers inside. One theory as to the motive for this attack is that the Asians, who were Moslems, disliked the presence of the pub in a heavily Moslem area (teetotalism is a part of the Moslem faith). Elsewhere in the town young Asians attacked cars and shops for no apparent reason other than that the owners were white.

The Dewsbury trouble did receive fairly extensive media coverage — though of a kind which greatly minimised the blame to be attached to the Asians for what happened. By contrast, the racial conflict in the West Bowling area of Bradford has received scant attention, and the obvious truth is that the controllers of the newspapers and broadcasting do not want it to become a national talking point.

LONDON RACE VIOLENCE HUSHED UP

The London disorders have had even less coverage by the media than those in Bradford. Only by monitoring local newspapers and getting 'on-the-spot' reports from our readers have we been able to find out what has been happening.

On Saturday, July 15th, a surge of racial mayhem hit London's East End. A mob of about a thousand Asians, mostly Bangladeshi, staged a disorderly demonstration just outside Bethnal Green police station.

Their protest was aimed at local police following the death of a Bangladeshi a few days before at the hands of what was described as a multi-racial gang, during a burglary. It is believed that the gang, said to have consisted of two Afro-Caribbeans and a White, had knifed the Asian.

Demonstrating Bangladeshis were worked up into a frenzy by a claim that "police had not responded quickly enough" to the killing. They staged a sit-down in the middle of Bethnal Green Road, which blocked this main East End thoroughfare for up to two hours, as their chosen means of making their point.

'RACIAL ATTACKS': CAMDEN COUNCIL'S RECORD

FOR MANY YEARS, Camden's Labour-controlled council has been playing the pro-ethnic minority game at the expense of local British folk. Over no issue has the council shown its true colours more blatantly than that of 'racial attacks'.

Let there be just the hint of any such attack, or even just of 'harassment', by any White against a non-White, and everything going hits the fan! Whites are threatened by the council with eviction from their homes at the merest suggestion that they have caused so much as a bit of disquiet or discomfort to non-white neighbours. At the first whisper of any street aggro in which immigrants are alleged to have been on the receiving end from Whites, police are ordered onto the streets at the instigation of their local political masters to protect the precious immigrant hide which is reported to be in peril.

But if Whites are the victims... Ah, that's different!

Camden's commissars showed their true colours a couple of years ago, when an elderly white couple of Polish descent, Mr. and Mrs. Buczkowski, were savagely beaten up by Afro-Caribbean neighbours after going round to complain about noise from a 'ghetto-blasters'. During subsequent proceedings, at the end of which the Buczkowskis' black assailants were convicted of assault and grievous bodily harm, the council's race relations officials completely took the side of the criminals.

When the Buczkowskis applied for compensation as victims of a racial attack, as the council's rules allow, they were turned down. The reason? It is Camden's official policy that an attack can only be regarded as 'racial' if the victim was black or Asian!

On this occasion Camden Council had let everything hang out so far that the media felt they had to take up the story. Finally, even Premier Margaret Thatcher, under whose rule the anti-white race tyranny in places like Camden has grown to its present proportions, thought it advisable to keep in with some of her punters by being seen publicly shedding some crocodile tears over the old couple's plight.

Not that she saw fit to put much effort into the case. In the upshot, the Buczkowskis received a derisory award of about £250. This followed 11 years of noise and harassment from their black neighbours before the assault finally took place, during which time they were treated with total indifference by the borough's housing officials, despite numerous complaints and appeals for action. This means that the Buczkowskis received the equivalent of about 44p a week for their sufferings. The council refused a penny more, saying that this was quite sufficient.

Plainly, the whole issue of 'racial attacks' is just intended as another stick with which to hit Whites. No wonder Camden's Labour vermin are showing the same instant bias, this time against the borough's young Whites, now that real race conflict is starting to blow up there — as is shown by our latest report from the Camden area on page 3.

MOST READERS will have read last month's reports of the highly successful BNP rallies in Darlington and Dewsbury, which took place in June.

The response to these rallies was remarkable, with hundreds turning up. This phenomenon should give us cause for urgent reflection.

Throughout the 1980s, the nationalist movement in Britain has fought an uphill battle. We have had to contend with public apathy and political disillusionment. In the previous decade there was much promise, with signs of British people in considerable numbers being prepared to stir themselves and fight to recover the country they had lost. Thousands came on marches. Electoral results in some areas came to around 25 per-cent of the vote. Our adversaries were alarmed at our growth, and could not stop talking about us.

Then in 1979 came the big setback. We scored disappointingly in the general election of that year. A short time afterwards we became the victims of a series of tragic internal splits.

A major reason for our poor votes in the election of 1979 was what some people have called the 'Thatcher bandwagon'. Many members of the British public were persuaded, by slick Tory propaganda, that Mrs. Thatcher's accession to the leadership meant a 'swing to the right', and that she would remedy most of the national ills that had previously led people to vote for nationalist candidates. In particular, the then new Tory leader's TV statement of her concern that Britain would be 'swamped' by immigrants served to win for her the bulk of the anti-immigration vote.

Frustrated at the polls, and disheartened by divisions in the movement, many people of nationalist inclinations gave up in despair. They retained their opinions, but they lost hope that anything could be done. They saw no point in any further activity and lapsed in their membership of the movement.

And this mood caught the public as a whole. Great numbers of people did not like the way the country was going — not at least after few years of Thatcherism, when it had become clear that the Prime Minister intended doing nothing to stop the 'swamping' of which she had spoken when still fishing for the people's votes. We, of course, always knew that she would do nothing, but we were powerless to persuade the public of this; they had to find out for themselves.

But none of this led to people taking action. The mood was that the situation was hopeless. When race riots convulsed our cities, when the economy continued in further decline, while law and order collapsed and anarchy took over, millions shrugged their shoulders and turned their attention back to their private affairs, seeking to ensure that, as far as possible, they and their families would be insulated from the worst effects of the national rot.

DIVISION

Meanwhile the nationalist movement continued to remain divided and impotent. Our party took several initiatives to overcome this division by holding out the hand of reconciliation to those who had become estranged from us, but it was of no avail. Men of very miniature stature and capability had risen to the top of several of the small organisations that had sprouted up in place of the much larger one that we had built in the previous decade. They enjoyed the feeling of importance and the taste of 'power' that the new situation had given them, and they would not surrender their recently-won status. Their vanity and egotism completely blinded them to the limitations of their capacities and of their credibility as would-be national 'leaders', and they strutted and postured before their minuscule followings while Britain's factories closed down and Britain's cities burned.

Anxious to justify their divisive attitudes, they conveniently invented 'ideological' quarrels, by which they sought to dress their petty personal ambitions and jealousies in the finery of 'principles'. But their dreams of grandeur were never matched by their achievements; through their incompetence and folly their always tiny parties grew yet tinier; their splintering mentality led to yet further splits, signalled by circulars and counter-circulars flying through the post in a mutual orgy of name-calling and eye-scratching. This tendency reached the point of final farce when the heads of the warring gangs started swapping punches with each other at a recent election count, in front of the nation's TV cameras. Then as these heads were confronted by the evidence of their dwindling strength, they naturally blamed their followers instead of themselves.

BRITAIN TO GET THEIR ACT TOGETHER

Throughout these unfruitful times, we have endeavoured — I claim successfully — to maintain our composure and our resolve, never doubting that events would prove us right, patiently and at times stoically waiting for the signs of a change in the public mood, and in the meantime building the foundations of a strong, solid and enduring organisation, while avoiding the wastage of resources on ventures of futility, such as electoral contests where we stood only to be annihilated and humiliated. By these means, we have acquired the wherewithal to open up a bookshop premises and embark on a vast expansion in the range of our literature. We have immunised ourselves against internal division, and have attracted a quality of membership that is, to me, a constant source of pride and inspiration. And, not unimportantly, our financial condition, while never attaining the level of opulence, has remained stable and free of debt.

But during all these long years we cannot claim to have broken through to greatly increased public support. New members recruited have just slightly exceeded old ones dropping out. Despite our achievement in building a very sound and very good organisation, we have still had to fight against the dead weight of public apathy, combined with the despair born of a decade of impotence afflicting the nationalist movement everywhere.

AWAKENING

Now, at long last, there are signs of all this changing. Recent experiences indicate that the discontent of the British people, long bottled up under the surface, is finally coming to the boil again, with large numbers looking for a truly radical political change. The honeymoon with Mrs. Thatcher is increasingly turning sour, with the Government's popularity rating lower than at any time during its ten-year period of office.

At Darlington and Dewsbury we saw, not one or two dozen, but hundreds of ordinary folk, with no previous political affiliations and mainly young, demonstrating their support for us and reacting to our enemies with anger and, in many cases, physical chastisement! In the past month or two, enquiries about the party have increased dramatically and the pace of new recruits coming in has started to quicken. The name of our party, for long languishing in obscurity, is now on thousands of lips.

Is this the start of a massive new upsurge of public support for nationalism? I am not going to say so with 100 per-cent certainty, for false alarms in politics are always possible. But I would say that the evidence of such an upsurge is greater than at any time since the start of the 1980s.

The big question about such an upsurge is: are we organised and prepared to exploit it?

What we cannot afford to let happen is a huge influx of would-be active nationalists into the movement, but without the movement having the necessary nationwide organisation to absorb it and direct it properly. This would result in great numbers of people wanting to do something but without experienced and capable leaders on hand to tell them what to do and how to associate, capabilities that we badly need — which we must harness to take advantage of the immense opportunities that now beckon on the horizon.

THE BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY

It would have been better if, several years ago, all these many talents had been combined together in a single party by mutual consent, and by means of a merger between the various organisations.

But the chance to do this was missed. It was missed as a result of the petty-mindedness of our opposite numbers in the other nationalist groups, to whom we offered it but who spurned it. From that time on, our policy has been that we must unite the nationalist movement under the leadership, and by virtue of the superior strength and achievement, of the British National Party.

We believe that that superior strength and achievement have now been demonstrated beyond any possible doubt. If anyone questioned it prior to this year, it can hardly be questioned now.

I do not state this fact to enjoy the sensation of crowing — there can be little to crow about in a decade behind us of lost opportunities and political impotence. In that decade all of us have been the losers.

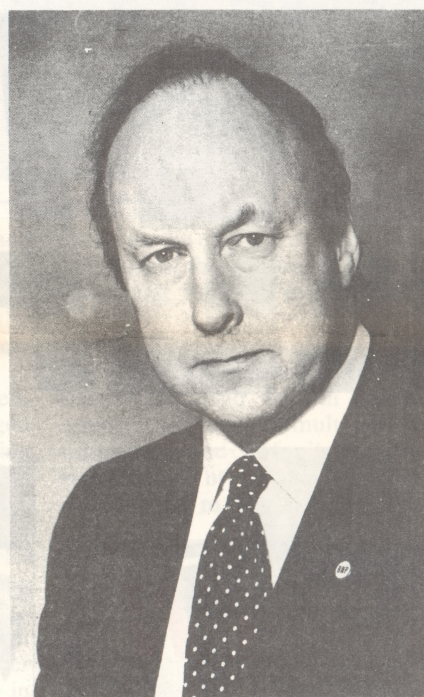

I state such a fact only because I am absolutely convinced that the lead given by the BNP now offers the best way forward in the decade to come — a decade in which all of us who want to save Britain must combine forces and work together, otherwise that decade (and the present century) will end with Britain being past saving.

When I have stretched out the hand of conciliation and talked of unity in the past, there have been some who sneered that I was talking from a position of weakness. I hope that those people will today realise that I am talking from a position of strength.

In the experiences of the past month or so, I believe we have sensed the first stirrings of the long slumbering spirit of the British people. It would be a tragedy of world-historical dimensions if that spirit, in its newly awakened energy, were not to find an outlet in an effective movement whereby it could be mobilised towards the achievement of national political power, if it were to drift, leaderless and without direction, so as eventually to burn itself out.

To provide this movement is our mission and our duty. We do not have long in which to do it. Let's rise to this challenge — before it's too late!

An appeal from JOHN TYNDALL

do it. The leaders we have are well tested on the battlefield of nationalist politics and know their jobs. But they cannot be everywhere at once. They are two few in number, and their time is already too committed, for them suddenly to be able to take on the task of organising and directing new adherents in their several thousands.

What does all this mean? It means that nationalists in Britain must quickly come together and pool the leadership, organisational and propagandising talents at their disposal — all the talents, combined with all the resources, that are at the command of the nationalist movement.

I have, earlier in this article, condemned the fantasies and delusions of some of those who have set themselves up as rivals to us in the promotion of the nationalist cause. But that does not mean that there are not within the ranks of their organisations, or among their former but now lapsed

Hong Kong Chinese agitate to come to Britain. Why can't they go elsewhere in Asia?

AMID all the tear-jerking propaganda presently being employed to persuade us to take the Hong Kong Chinese into Britain, one thing is never explained to us. If the prospect of communist rule in another eight years' time is so fearful to Hong Kong's inhabitants that, to avoid it, they feel the need to leave and seek refuge elsewhere, why is it being said that they must necessarily come to Britain and the West?

After all, one would have thought, the world is a big place, and there is plenty of time for these people to work out an alternative, which could avoid the further overburdening of our country with yet more wholly alien and unassimilable immigrants.

Just to start with, why cannot Hong Kong's Chinese go to countries close at hand, inhabited by their ethnic cousins? Japan, Korea and Taiwan are three countries that immediately come to mind — the last-named being in fact inhabited by the very same Chinese race as belongs to Hong Kong.

But we do not hear of any agitation in the press that these countries should take Hong Kong refugees.

These countries apart, there is a whole world where the Hong Kong people might go and where they might indeed be a boon to the local economies. If it is not considered that they should go to countries closely akin to them ethnically, what about Africa? What about Latin America? What about the Middle East?

These areas belong to the poverty-stricken 'Third World'. If the economic dynamism of the Hong Kong Chinese is all it's cracked up to be, might not these people work wonders for Ethiopia, Mozambique, Angola and Zaire—or else Brazil, Columbia, Venezuela or Peru? The Hong Kongers ought, one supposes, to be transforming the economies of such countries beyond recognition—into hives of industrial and technological progress.

After all, the people who are always screaming that the Hong Kong Chinese should be allowed to come here are also always screaming about our so-called 'obligation' to help the economies of these poor countries of the 'Third World'. Surely one way to help them is to send them masses of Chinese!

And let us remember, many of these underdeveloped countries are also underpopulated. The Hong Kong Chinese could settle there without overcrowding—as would be the case if they came to Britain or Western Europe.

But none of this has been suggested. And the fact that it has not been suggested makes us believe that there is something about the whole affair of the Hong Kong Chinese that stinks.

Some people raise their eyebrows at our paper when we talk of conspiracies. But doesn't all this agitation on behalf of the Chinese, to the effect that they should be allowed into Britain, have about it the whiff of conspiracy?

Is there in fact a conspiracy to dump millions on non-white people on Britain and the West? Some may say that such a suggestion is far-fetched. But, if it is, how else do they explain why the Chinese, like the Vietnamese Boat People before them, and like the Uganda Asians before them, must always come here?

As race war blows up in the capital...

YOUNG LONDONERS GIVE THE RACE TRAITORS A PIECE OF THEIR MINDS

BRITISH PEOPLE are now becoming less willing to suffer in silence as race-mixing politicians and their paid lackeys in local authorities try to bully and browbeat them into submission to the multi-racialist tyranny. This is the latest message from local Whites in the North London borough of Camden.

For some months there have been clashes in the Regents Park and Somers Town areas of this loony-left Labour-controlled borough. Asian immigrant newcomers, mostly Bengalis, whom the multi-racialist fanatics of Camden Council have been flooding into these districts for the last few years, have been involved in what are described as running battles with young Britons native to the neighbourhood.

The official response has been fully in line with what might be expected from Britain's ruling politicians and councillors. In early July, Camden's pro-minority local bigwigs staged a public meeting to denounce 'racial attacks'. The meeting took place in the hall of the Edith Neville School, which is itself now thought to be up to 80 per cent Bangladeshi. The main object of the exercise seems to have been to point the finger of blame for Camden's race violence solely at the borough's white youth, and to get an 'anti-racist' campaign going, in which these Whites seem to be the main target.

Backed up by local Labour MP Frank Dobson, Indian race committee chairman Nirmal Roy and Tory Councillor Huntley Spence, Camden Mayor Barbara Hughes took her mainly white audience to task, bleating about how 'ashamed' she was to be a white person in view of the sufferings she alleged Asian immigrants were undergoing at the local Whites' hands. Tory Councillor Spence then bumbled about how 'race attacks'—which in council jargon always mean alleged assaults by Whites on immigrants, never the other way round—were "the issue of greatest seriousness before Camden at the present time." Local police Superintendent Peter Stevens, who makes no bones about his pro-immigrant sympathies, had also turned up to stick his oar in. Chief Supt. Stevens rounded off the finger-wagging with a threat to stamp out 'racists'.

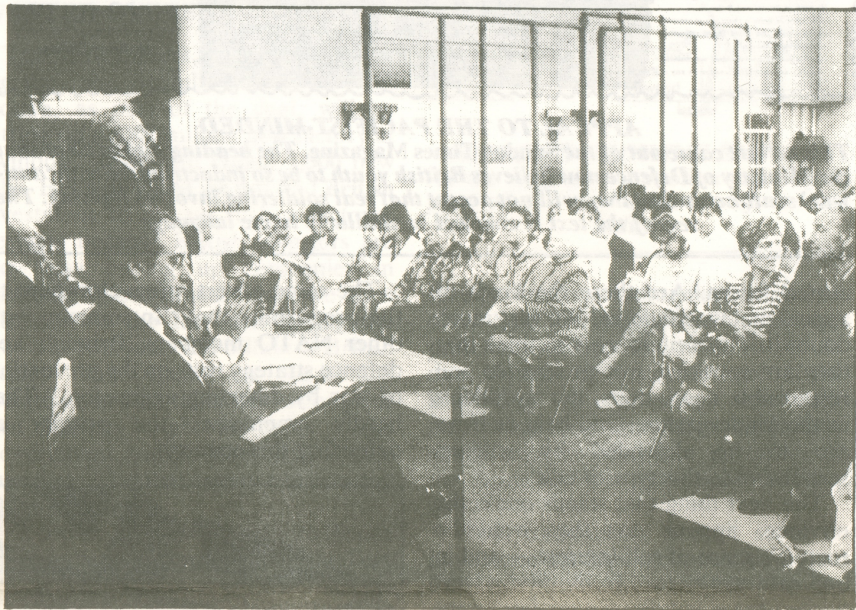

But this time the Whites present were not prepared to put up with being slapped down by such people.

TROUBLE TWO-SIDED

Without a doubt, there has been plenty of race violence in Camden of late. But it has not been the one-sided affair that this little clique of professional race-mixers make out.

Even Supt. Stevens had to admit in a letter leaked to the local press some time before the meeting that Asians in the area had lately been found "acting very aggressively." Of course, running true to form, he went on to put the blame for this state of things on local Whites!

According to Supt. Stevens, the Bengalis were "normally placid." He alleged that they had only become otherwise after being provoked by white

POLITICIANS CAMPAIGN AGAINST WHITES

This is a meeting which took place in July in the Somers Town area of Camden, North West London, with the purpose of launching a local campaign against so-called 'racists'—meaning ordinary white Londoners who are disenchanted with the multi-racial society. Labour MP Frank Dobson is seen speaking. He is flanked by a local police chief and Tory councillor—all the parties are in it together when it comes to doing the Whites down

'harassment' over a vaguely defined period. This, however, does not necessarily seem to have involved violence. Much of it, by his own acknowledgement, consisted of nothing worse than name-calling.

VICIOUS ATTACK ON WHITE

But whatever the truth or otherwise of all this, the borough's newspaper, the Camden New Journal, has published a blow-by-blow account of the incidents that have taken place, which seems to show that the present round of violence was first sparked off by a vicious attack in which the culprits were, without any doubt at all, immigrants. On March 6th, a young white man was set upon in the street by four or five Asian youths armed with weapons of various kinds. The gang beat, kicked, punched and finally stabbed the white youth, putting him in hospital.

Since then the violence has escalated. Caches of offensive weapons of the types used have been found, including iron scaffold poles, wooden sticks and even petrol bombs. Meanwhile, local press accounts clearly show that the attacks that have taken place, including many of the worst, have been by Asians against Whites at least as much as the other way round.

Small wonder that many of the Whites attending the meeting at the school came to the end of their patience. When MP Frank Dobson got up to speak, he was shouted down by at least a quarter of the audience, including a large contingent of angry young Whites.

UNWILLING SCAPEGOATS

These young Britons are clearly no longer prepared to accept being stood in the dock and made into scapegoats whenever the multi-racial society that has been forced on them explodes into conflict and violence.

Still less are they prepared to suffer the insult added to injury of being fingered in this way by the very politicians who have been guilty of ramming coloured immigration down their throats in the first place.

Camden's councillors, and its Labour MP, like their ilk up and down Britain, have a heavy burden of direct responsibility for bringing the multi-racial nightmare down upon ordinary British folk.

Labour, Tory or whatever, they are nothing but political spivs, in love with the minorities for their own ends. They do not give a damn for decent native-born British people. Why should they? Many of them are queers, assorted red degenerates and aliens. Many more are well-heeled yuppies living far from the consequences of the race-mixing policies they are forcing on the rest of us.

Camden's white folk did well to put these insolent politicians and councillors in their place.

Meanwhile, the true solution to the growing race war now menacing Britain is the nationalist solution of the BNP. We say: throw the race-mixing traitors out of power and end the multi-racial society without further ado.

Stop immigration! Start repatriation!

HOW DO THEY GET AWAY WITH IT?

IF YOU'RE BLACK, you're untouchable! This rule, so often demonstrated in court cases involving members of ethnic minorities who have broken the law, seems to have been underlined by the result of the prosecution of Dolly Kiffin.

big cheese of the Broadwater Farm Youth Association, based on the estate in Tottenham that became the scene of the riot in 1985 which culminated in PC Keith Blakelock's savage murder. Enquiries into the accounts of this association had revealed expenditure of £97,000 in 1984/85 and invoices for £30,000. Moreover, Mrs. Kiffin had bought a house in Jamaica, her homeland, for £17,000 in cash instalments which she said came out of her and her husband's savings. She was receiving supplementary benefit at the time.

A court ordered her to make available the financial records of the Youth Association so as to assist police enquiries. But three days before the deadline for handing the records over she conveniently 'lost' them in a flood in Jamaica!

She thereby escaped being prosecuted for embezzlement on the technicality of lack of evidence, but she was tried on a

STRIKES, INFLATION, BALANCE-OF-PAYMENTS CRISIS

Maggie's 'revolution' goes up in smoke

LAUGHABLE. That is the only way to describe the boasts of Mrs. Thatcher and the Tories that they have brought about some kind of 'revolution' in the management of Britain's economy and industrial relations.

With the rail strikes, unrest in the docks and local government stoppages in protest over low pay, managers and workers up and down Britain are now being set each other's throats in a manner not seen since the 1970s. Industrial civil war seems to be back with a vengeance.

Much of this is related to the fact that the Government, contrary to all its professed principles and policies, has utterly failed to control inflation. And in addition to this, every month brings bad news in the way of Britain's balance of trade with the rest of the world.

The truth always comes out in the end, and the truth of the last ten years of Tory rule is that, in the management both of the economy in general and industrial relations in particular, Mrs. Thatcher and her Government have made no meaningful changes at all.

Much of the trouble in respect of the pay disputes is due to the fact that nearly stagnant wages are chasing increasingly spiralling living costs. Mrs. Thatcher's Government has never properly tackled inflation because it has never attempted for a moment to get to grips with its real cause. On the contrary, the Government has continued, like its predecessors, to leave the bankers free to create all new money entering the economy as a debt at interest to be borne by the nation, with the interest component written into the price of all goods and services subsequently produced.

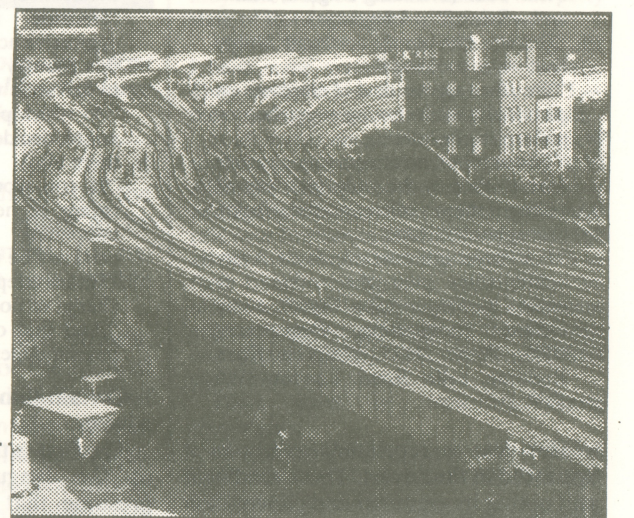

The rate of inflation was kept down while credit was kept down, but now that credit has been expanded, in an effort to make the Government more popular, inflation is again on the increase. Hence the new mood of shop-floor militancy, as workers seek pay rises in line with the increasing size of their domestic bills.

This mood shows something else. After ten years of Thatcherism, the same old distrust and conflict between workers and management that have bedevilled British industry for generations are still very much alive and kicking. The truth is that, for all her huffing and puffing, Mrs. Thatcher has left Britain's antiquated structure of industrial relations pretty much as she found it. Above all, she has done nothing to cure the 'class-war' mentality built into that structure.

However much Mrs. Thatcher and her ministers might want to turn round and blame the railwaymen and other workers as 'wreckers', it is they who have now set the scene for renewed industrial warfare. Now that, as a result of their mismanagement, the

WHAT KINDS OF TWITS ARE THEY SEEKING FOR ARMY OFFICERS?

MoD adverts an insult to the intelligence

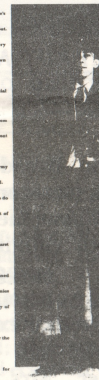

NAPOLEON referred to the British soldiers of his time as "lions led by donkeys." British Army officering has by no means always been as bad as this, but it has to be true that on many occasions in our military history good troops have had their effectiveness reduced by leadership lacking in courage, intelligence and commitment.

Does our present Ministry of Defence want to produce good officers for the armed forces? Or does it want twits of the kind contemptuously referred to by the First Bonaparte? If the present style of advertisements for young recruits is anything to go by, we might be forgiven for wondering!

Reproduced on this page is an advert which recently has appeared in several newspapers. It shows a figure of a young man with his right side clothed in civilian attire and his left in an army officer's uniform. Headed 'We'll pay his way from playground to paragon', the text runs as follows:-

"Inside many a fifth former there's an Army Officer just waiting to get out. 'Not that we're suggesting every 15-year-old should be given their own platoon of men. 'But we do believe in giving potential officers the very best start in life.

UNISEX ARMY

This feeble effort has appeared in numerous newspapers, the cutting here being taken from The Daily Mail. In the text the appeal is for young people of both sexes, suggesting that the Army now regards them as no different!

"The way we look at it, helping them get a good education today is a great investment for tomorrow.

This text is reprinted exactly as it appeared in the advert. Those reading it and noting its grammar and punctuation may find it curious that a 'high grade' pass in English is required of all applicants!

PACIFIST LANGUAGE

For slight variation, it is worth looking at another army officer advert, which was published recently across two pages of the Sunday Times Magazine. This was strangely headed 'Peacemongers', though accompanied by a picture of an advancing tank with gun barrel at the ready. It would seem that the Ministry of Defence, who must have commissioned the advert, regards present-day British youth as being so rotted with pacifism that such a heading is necessary to persuade the reader to read on. The text then goes like this:-

"Peacemongers, you wonder, as you stare somewhat quizzically down the wrong end of a 17-foot tank barrel.

"But this is a sixty two ton battle weapon capable of destroying an entire enemy tank battalion with a single load of shells.

"Whose computer-targeted 120mm gun despatches rounds at four times the speed of sound.

"Exactly what has such an awesome engine of war got to do with keeping the peace?

"The answer in fact is rather a lot. "Talk softly and carry a big stick' goes an ancient West African proverb.

"Ancient it might be, but it's a piece of thinking bang up to date in our view. "For it is big sticks just like this tank that enable the British Army to do some very useful soft talking all around the world.

"In Cyprus, for example, we assist the UN in maintaining the delicate ceasefire between the Greek and Turkish sectors.

"In Sinai we have been a key member of the Multinational Observer Force since 1982.

"And here, in Northern Ireland, we can provide a vital support role to the Royal Ulster Constabulary in helping preserve law and order.

"These are the more obvious examples of the Army's peacekeeping activities; but there are many less well-known ones we could mention.

"For instance, we offer on-the-spot military assistance and training to fifteen non-NATO countries such as Brunei and Belize.

"Whilst here in Britain there are at present 3,600 students from the Third World attending military instruction courses.

"Learning for themselves that soft talking can be equally as powerful a weapon as any of those in the modern soldier's armoury.

"So much for peacekeeping, you may now be thinking. What about keeping the Peace, the kind we have enjoyed ever since 1945?

"Well, curiously enough, that ancient West African saying still holds true. "In common with other NATO members Britain's key defence strategy rests on the prevention of war by deterring aggression.

"It is a strategy that has successfully forestalled major conflict throughout Europe for the last forty three years. "Conventional land forces, on regular exercise and constant twenty four hour alert, are vital to the credibility of that deterrence.

"Because in response to any aggressive act, they are the only means this country has to prevent escalation to full-scale war.

"At which point someone might, just might, decide to use the biggest stick of them all.

"If you would like to devote your career to helping prevent that ever happening, then you should most certainly be talking to us.

"Either telephone 0800 555 555 free of charge or post off the coupon.

"And find out more about life as a peacemonger."

Certain things stand out in these two adverts.

The first is the thoroughly inane level of the language used. We would presume that our military authorities wish to attract young people of intelligence to qualify as officers for the Peacemongers.

Peacemongers, you wonder, as you stare somewhat quizzically down the wrong end of a 17-foot tank barrel. But this is a sixty two ton battle weapon capable of destroying an entire enemy tank battalion with a single load of shells. ### APPEAL TO THE PACIFIST-MINDED

This advert came out of the Sunday Times Magazine. The heading makes clear that the Ministry of Defence now believes British youth to be so indoctrinated with 'anti-war' sentiments that they will not accept that real soldiering involves fighting. The rest of the text is couched in similarly inane language armed forces. Are these the kinds of appeal that would do so? We very much doubt it. The writers seem to think that they are speaking, not to sensible and responsible near-adults, but to kiddies in the kindergarten. God help us if we are to be defended by soldiers responsive to this type of talk!

The next thing that stands out is the obvious appeal to the would-be recruit's sense of self-interest — and in one case vanity too. In the first advert quoted there is talk of a tax-free grant and then of rates of pay. Then there is the reference to the 'kudos' of having gone through Sandhurst.

Disturbing, to say the least, is the apparent placing of young males and females into virtually the same categories. Women have their role in the armed forces, of course. But that should be in their own special units. Here notice in one advert the use of the possessive pronoun 'their', presumably meaning either 'his' or 'her', followed then by the phrase "platoon of men." Are we to take it from this that the Ministry of Defence now envisages units of men commanded by women? Indeed it does, for that is already happening, as our report in the May issue of British Nationalist on a British unit serving with the 'peacekeeping' force in South West Africa showed up to be fact.

As is indicated by the advert headed 'Peacemongers', the would-be young recruit to today's Army is being induced to believe that serving in the armed forces does not involve fighting — a truly remarkable interpretation of the role of the soldier! Of course no-one would argue that the preservation of the peace is not desirable, and that strong forces do not contribute to this by serving as a deterrent. But to emphasise this to the virtual exclusion of any possibility that the serving soldier might be called upon to take part in battle is not only grossly misleading but likely to attract entirely the wrong kind of recruit to the colours. Do we really want our Army to be led by officers who have been induced to join up by this kind of Sunday School slush?

ROLE OF BOBBIES

But the most glaring omission in both adverts, total in one and almost total in the other, is any suggestion that soldiers in uniform exist first and foremost to defend their country — and its interests. The 'Peacemongers' advert talks of service in Northern Ireland. But even here it is not stated that defence of a part of the United Kingdom is the primary purpose; all that we are told is that the Army helps "to preserve law and order." Surely a young man whose aim in life is to do that will apply to become a bobby!

The same advert refers elsewhere to the proposition that "In common with other NATO members, Britain's key defence strategy rests on the prevention of war by deterring aggression." That hardly emphasises the priority of defending this country!

THE RIGHT PICTURE FOR ARMY RECRUITMENT

British troops are shown here hoisting the flag after the victory in the Falklands. This is the kind of symbolism that should illustrate our appeal to young would-be officers. It should be accompanied by patriotic language, not talk of serving with the UN and "keeping the peace."

Almost nothing about defending Britain and nothing at all about fighting for Britain — but plenty about assisting the UN in Cyprus and serving with the multi-national force in Sinai, training the forces of Brunei and Belize and instructing other Third World military students here in Britain, who no doubt enjoy facilities in this country that add considerably to the cost of our armed services budget without yielding the slightest in the way of stronger British and if these adverts were not written by one of its functionaries they most certainly had its approval. We have an idea from these appeals of the kind of armed forces the Government aims at for the future. The prospect is alarming. If this is really what we want from our soldiery, we may as well abdicate our nationhood now and have done with it. Indeed the only hope of our ever winning a war with these methods is that the enemy may collapse laughing!

Time for US forces to go home

WE HAVE SAID for a long time that the pose of both the USSR and USA facing each other across Europe is nothing more than a ploy to keep the nations of this continent occupied and Europe divided up into 'spheres of influence' between the two so-called 'super powers'.

For years, Britain has been a client state of the USA and a slavish lapdog to the international financial system controlled from that country. This subservience has been disguised by US forces here posing as our 'protectors'.

Now, however, the disastrous state of the economy in Russia has obliged Mr. Gorbachev to make big cuts in the Soviet armed forces. In December he agreed to remove from Eastern Europe 10,000 tanks, 8,500 artillery pieces, 800 combat aircraft and 500,000 troops.

To be sure, this cut still leaves the USSR far stronger in Europe than NATO. But, crucially, 5,000 of the tanks scheduled for removal comprise six of the fifteen forward-based tank divisions in Czechoslovakia, East Germany and Hungary. This is 40 per-cent of the Soviet standing start-strike potential on the central front in Eastern Europe.

The idea that there is a Soviet 'threat' to Western Europe, only deterred by US forces stationed on our continent, is even less credible than in the past.

Reflecting the new state of affairs was a recent poll which established that only 29 per-cent of the people thought that the Soviet Union posed a menace to Britain. This figure represents a drop from 85 per-cent four years ago.

The bubble of pretence that America is 'protecting' us has now been burst. It is time for the US forces in Britain — and in the rest of Europe — to pack up and go home!

In neither of the adverts is there any mention of the Falklands War, where British forces were obliged to go and fight for the possession of British territory and for British people — surely the most practical reason for deploying our servicemen anywhere!

Neither is there the slightest mention of the glorious fighting traditions of the British forces over the long span of our country's history — nothing whatever to stir the blood, nothing in the whitest to appeal to a young man's sense of patriotism!

WRONG APPEAL

All in all, these adverts for army officers are puerile and pathetic. The kind of young person likely to be impressed with them is the very opposite of the type that we need to defend Britain in the world of the future: a vain, self-centred, mercenary coward with a thoroughgoing internationalist outlook — and stupid into the bargain!

And one thing more! As a footnote to the 'Peacemongers' advert, it is stated that "The Armed Forces are Equal Opportunity Employers under the terms of the Race Relations Act 1976."

Yes, you've guessed it — among other things, the MoD is most anxious to attract members of the ethnic minorities. Surprise! Surprise!

Ultimately of course, the buck for this kind of nonsense stops with the Government. The Ministry of Defence is of course a department of Government,

Our verdict on the Rover-Honda deal...

ANOTHER SELL-OUT!

BEHIND all the sweet talk and assurances, the truth is inescapable. The Government has sanctioned the sell-out of the one remaining British-owned volume car manufacturer to the Japanese.

This is the reality of the purchase by Honda of a 20 per-cent stake in the Rover firm, announced last month.

To pretend, as Government apologists are doing, that this new deal represents some kind of 'partnership' designed to help Rover is to fly in the face of all the facts concerning Japanese commercial drive and strategy. The Japs do not see it as their business to do good turns to their international competitors; they take part in deals with them for one purpose only: to drive them out of existence. That is the clear purpose behind the takeover of part of Rover.

One man who is not exactly an ignoramus where the motor trade is concerned is Mr. Mike Rutherford, assistant editor of Auto Express. On hearing of the deal he said: "This is the thin end of the wedge and looks like the end of the road for the big British-take over Leyland Trucks, and when this did not succeed it invited the Dutch company DAF to buy up Leyland instead.

There just seems no other conclusion than that the Thatcher Government does not want British industry to be British-owned, that it wants foreigners to buy up as much of our country as possible.

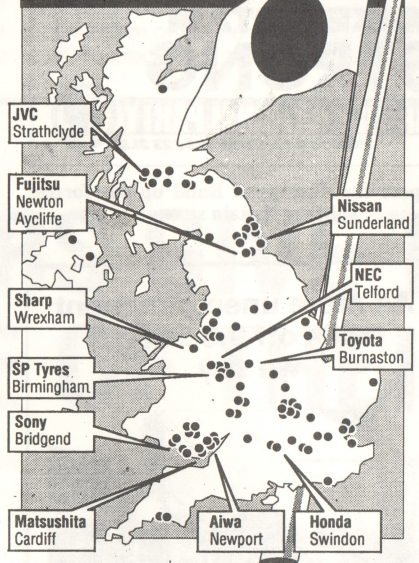

We do not often find ourselves in agreement with spokesmen on the Labour side of the House of Commons but we have to concur with Opposition industry spokesman John Garrett, when he said that Honda's investment in Rover threatened to "turn Britain's manufacturing industry into a Japanese offshore island."

BRITISH CAPITAL WASTED OVERSEAS

The Government, in order to sugar the pill, has gleefully announced that Honda, as part of the deal, will be setting up a £300 million new factory at Swindon, which will create 1,300 new jobs. But why could we not find British investment to set up such a factory? Perhaps because British investors are too busy buying up companies in America. In our January issue we drew attention to the fact that during the previous two years £33 billion of British money had spent on such US investments. Just think how strong our own industry might be today if the Government had insisted, as it should have done, that that money was invested in this country.

Of course, the Rover deal with Honda was, predictably, applauded by the Tory press, and indeed most of the remainder of the newspapers — always loyal to

Japanese factories in Britain

NIPPON'S GROWING EMPIRE

As the map shows, motors are only a part of the Jap takeover of British industry foreign interests rather than to British ones. Said The Independent: "National pride may seem to dictate that we should own the industries located here. If the knowledge is spreading that such narrow-minded nationalism harms any nation where it takes root, the arrival of the Japanese is an even more hopeful sign."

Well, nationalism doesn't seem to have done the Japs too much harm, has it — can you name a single major Jap manufacturer that is not Jap-owned?

THE SMILE OF THE TIGER
Honda chief Tadashi Kume looks extremely pleased with himself as he shakes hands with Trade Secretary Lord Young. He should do. His 20 per-cent of Rover gives him the 'foot in the door' that is likely to lead eventually to full takeover owned car firm." He went on to say: "The French people and their Government would never have let the same thing happen to Renault."

Indeed they would not.

Our own Government, however, has a very different philosophy where these multi-national take-overs are concerned. From the very start, it has done everything possible to encourage the buying up of large slices of British industry by foreign firms. It welcomed the takeover of Westland Helicopters by the American Sikorsky company. It did the same with the takeover of Rowntrees by the Swiss firm Nestle. It tried very hard to get the Americans to

The man destined for higher things

IN OUR January issue, we put the spotlight on Tory up-and-comer Ian Major (pictured here), who had just recently been reported as waxing lyrical about the Hindu Festival of Light and saying that "it illustrated how much Britain benefits from the enormous richness of the various cultures and traditions of its citizens." We commented that such attitudes indicated that Mr. Major was likely to be "destined for promotion to the highest level."

It seems that we were not wrong, for last month Mrs. Thatcher appointed Major as her new Foreign Secretary, and in so doing indicated that she regards him as her most likely successor as leader of the Tory Party.

In Major is one of the most dripping of the dripping wets in the Tory ranks. His promotion, and that of another arch-wet, Chris Patten, to boss of the Department of the Environment, are a sign that the 'Iron Lady' herself, far from being a 'right-wing' hardliner, is in fact a wet at heart — as we have always known she was. So watch out for bigger things for Mr. Major!

A CASE FOR CASTRATION

SEX-MURDERER and several-times rapist David Evans was sentenced at Chester Crown Court last month to 30 years' imprisonment. This followed his conviction

Euro-liberals try to dictate to British courts

JENS SOERING is wanted in the United States for a horrific double-murder. He is said to have slaughtered his girlfriend's parents and then danced in their blood.

Since this happened, he hopped it to Britain, where he is now awaiting a court decision on his extradition to the USA. As we have an extradition treaty with that country, this should be quite straightforward.

But those long-nosed busybodies of the European Court of Human Rights have stepped in and tried to stop us handing Soering over to his prosecutors. Why? Virginia, the state in which Soering is wanted, operates the death penalty, and the accused man, if sent back there, may spend years on death row before he is finally given the deserts which, if found guilty, he will be due.

How terribly, terribly beastly to the poor fellow!

But doesn't it make you sick when you think how the proper course of justice is being thwarted by a crowd of do-gooders in Strasbourg, in no way responsible to either the British or American public, and whose lips quiver at the thought of a brutal murderer sitting in a jail cell awaiting the electric chair?

And doesn't it make you doubly sick when you think of our own 'authorities' spinelessly kow-towing to these Euro-liberals and seriously considering their demand — instead of telling them to go to hell?

for the rape and killing of 15-year-old Anna Humphries.

Anna's distraught father, Mr. Trevor Humphries, said afterwards that his daughter might still be alive today had Evans been liable to a sentence of death for his crime.

Mr. Humphries was of course right, but that is not all. It transpired that Evans had behind him a whole string of sex offences, for which he had got off ridiculously lightly. Out of a total of 13 years of sentences he had, because of remission and parole, only served 7 years. And, despite being known to have psychopathic tendencies, he was released so as to be able to run free and menace yet more innocent females.

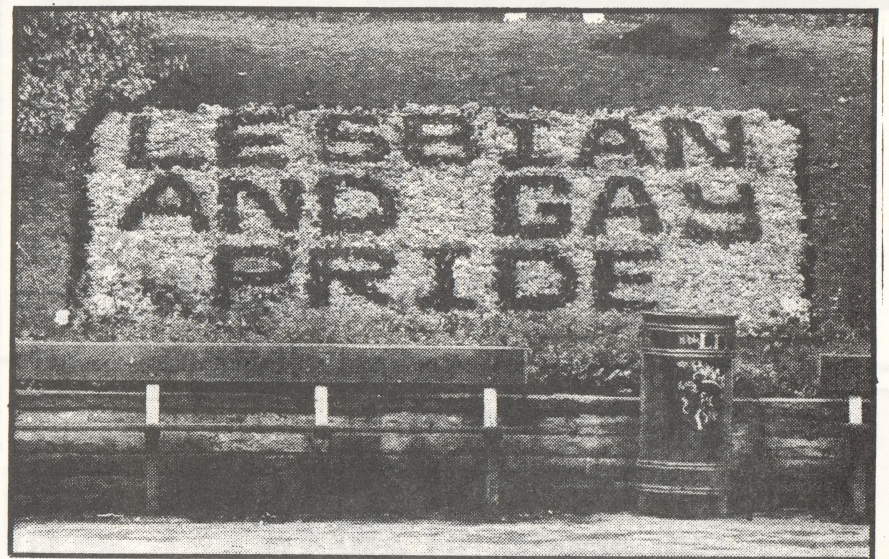

There is a simple, straightforward procedure by which it could have been ensured that Evans would never rape again after his first conviction for that crime. A surgical operation could have been carried out on one of his body parts which would have made such a repeat of the crime impossible.

'COMPASSION'

Why do we not do this with animals such as Evans? Simple — our society is too 'compassionate'. It would reject such a remedy as 'too harsh'.

We are governed by 'liberals', who shrink from the more severe, but much more practical and effective, methods of punishment — because of their concern for the 'rights' of the criminal and their desire not to be 'unkind' to him. Some even go so far as to think that creatures like Evans are not really evil at all, merely 'sick' and requiring 'treatment' and 'under-

A cause, not for pride, but for shame

The picture here shows a floral display in Piccadilly Gardens, Manchester, arranged by the local City Council. The words tell their own story. The Council commissioned the display, at the ratepayers' expense of course, despite massive opposition from the people of Manchester. This is just one more indication of the contempt shown by the elected representatives of the people for the feelings of those who put them there. So much for our much-vaunted 'democracy'! We consider this insult to the people of Manchester one of the worst obscenities inflicted by a local authority of the many we have seen.

Curiously enough, the best suggestion as to what ought to be done with this flower display is indicated by the object standing in the right-hand foreground — if only it were big enough!

There is a happy postscript: since we first decided to print this item, we have heard that the Piccadilly Gardens were visited at night by some public-spirited Mancunians, and the floral display is no longer there!

HIPPIES' 'RIGHTS'

We have heard that the DHSS and the post office in Teignmouth, Devon, have magnanimously consented to provide a colony of hippies with squatting land in the vicinity and the right to have their mail delivered there. Said one hippie: "We needed this so that the social security could send us our giro cheques instead of us having to go to town to collect them."

Britain gets ever madder and madder!

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — Allow me to congratulate you on the new and bigger British Nationalist. It is a tremendous improvement, and makes me look forward to my copy even more!

Frome, Somerset

Sir, — A clergyman in Staffordshire has recently warned that Islam will be Britain's main religion within a generation.

The Rev. Ian Gregory of Newcastle-under-Lyme has said that a Bible Society survey has showed that only 2.5 per-cent of British people read the Bible.

But a high proportion of the country's Moslems read from their holy text, The Koran, and pray five times a day. The Rev. Gregory has said that their faith, with an estimated two million followers in Britain, was daily becoming more influential, and he went on: "There are now more Moslems in this country than Methodists. I believe Britain is at the most only a generation away from being a Moslem country."

And I cannot see much sign of any 'holy crusade' by the Christian churches to prevent this happening.

ROBERT BEST
Enfield, Middlesex

Sir, — When the West Indians and Uganda Asians first came to this country those who supported their arrival said that their numbers were insignificant. This may have been so, but because of their tendency to have large families they have multiplied at an alarming rate by comparison to the indigenous population.

We must therefore be extremely cautious about opening the gates to the Chinese of Hong Kong, who are also prolific breeders.

Hearing all the flood of sympathy for the Hong Kong Chinese, I wonder why there has not been the same concern for the white people of 'Zimbabwe' (once Rhodesia), who were put into a similar situation by the black takeover of their country. Rhodesian Whites lost their entitlement to British nationality under the Act of 1981, rendering them as second class citizens, although they were predominantly of British descent. In this way they were trapped into the marxist, one-party state of Robert Mugabe's 'Zimbabwe'.

I speak from some personal knowledge, for I have some grandchildren in that country. They are as British as my late wife and I — they just happened to be born in Rhodesia.

It all makes me wonder why I spent six of my best years in the 8th Army, serving at El Alamein, Cassino and the Salerno beaches — and losing a 20-year-old brother in an RAF raid over Bremen in 1942. Did we go through all this so that I may see my grandchildren lose their British heritage and nationality while millions of West Indians, Africans and Asians are enjoying the privileges of living in this once-great country and holding British passports?

There must be something wrong somewhere!

I am compelled to use a pen-name to avoid victimisation of my family in Mr. Mugabe's Soviet state.

H.S. PALMER
Waltham Abbey, Essex

A surgical operation on first conviction and he would never have raped again

And all the time that this is happening our guardians of the public conscience are going to be delivering pious sermons to us, again and again, about how terrible it all is.

We will not make the streets, fields and woods safe for the likes of young Anna until we rid ourselves of the decadent sentimentality shown to garbage such as Evans, and apply against that ilk the ruthless measures that are needed to bring their vile practices to an end once and for all.

NATIONALISTS THRASH LABOURITES AT WELLING

ON THURSDAY, June 29th there appeared a 'shock-horror-gasp' headline in the London Evening Standard. It said "Blackshirts on rampage" and it was followed by what purported to be an account of a meeting of the Labour Party in Welling, Kent, near to the British National Party's bookshop. The meeting had been called by the Labourites in support of their themselves had started, the organisers of the meeting ran and called for the police. The latter, who are no particular lovers of the Labour Party in Welling, took a long time responding, and eventually a solitary constable arrived, telling the assembled company that the police were short-handed and could not spare any more men.

Dismayed by this lack of voluminous always providing that they have a big numerical advantage when doing so. On this particular evening they did not enjoy the advantage to which they are accustomed, and they were foolish enough to take on a group of nationalists near enough their own number. They were well and truly annihilated. Perhaps in the future they will be a little more sensible — and try argument instead!

Blackshirts on rampage

Women take cover as thugs storm meeting

AN anti-fascist meeting organised by a Labour party erupted into violence last night when black-shirted opponents raided the building and attacked the audience.

Women dived for cover as more than 20 men stormed the meeting and smashed chairs and windows at the library building in Welling.

by Arthur Leathley

Twelve people in the audience of 60 were taken to hospital as police tried to restore calm at the meeting, called to close down a bookshop run by the extreme Right-wing British National Party.

As fighting broke out, some members tried to flee by smashing a window to a fire escape from the upstairs room.

The public meeting, organised by Bexley Labour Movement Campaign Against Fascism, was abandoned after police said that only one officer could be provided to cover the remainder of the debate.

Seven people were held in custody overnight at Bexleyheath, and police took state-

TYPICAL PRESS HYPE

This ludicrous headline appeared in the Evening Standard on the 29th June. The report was obviously taken from the accounts of Labour Party members of a fracas in which they were involved with supporters of the BNP. Needless to say, there were no 'black shirts'.

campaign against the bookshop. For some weeks, they had been attempting to whip up opposition to the BNP locally but had not had much success. It was hoped at the meeting to decide on new steps to fight the nationalists.

The Standard reporter Arthur Leathley printed, without question, what was obviously the Labourites' version of what happened. In the report it was alleged that the meeting was proceeding peacefully (how touchingly 'peaceful' these leftists always are!) when a gang of men burst into the hall shouting "British National Party" and started to attack the audience.

As it happens, we have our own witnesses who were present at the event, and their story is somewhat different. This is what occurred:-

BNP supporters got wind of the meeting and decided to turn up to argue with the Labourites on a purely verbal basis; nothing 'physical' was intended.

The meeting was attended by about 50 Labour Party supporters. About 45 BNP supporters arrived at the hall. Some five or six of them were slightly ahead of the rest of the BNP contingent as they walked up the stairs of Welling Library and into the meeting.

When the Labourites saw this modest number coming in the door, they immediately recognised them as BNP activists. Thinking that they were alone, the warriors of the left, evidently plucking up courage from what they thought to be their 8-1 numerical advantage, piled into the BNP men and started punching and kicking them.

It turned out to be a very unwise thing to do. The Labourites had been in so much of a hurry to get stuck into the small BNP contingent that they had not looked beyond them and seen about 40 more entering the building and coming up the stairs!

Needless to say, when the remainder of the BNP party realised what was happening they tore up the stairs and pitched into the leftists. It was hardly a contest. Within a very short time the BNP men had taken over the meeting and in the process put a dozen Labourites into hospital.

Terrified out of their wits at the outcome of the fight that they

FINE KENT RALLY

KENT REGION of the BNP held its most successful rally ever in Ashford on Saturday, July 29th. An audience of just under 100 assembled in the hall to hear speeches against the Common Market, which represented the main theme. The rally began with Kent BNP Organiser Michael Easter giving a local perspective on the Market. He was followed by a guest speaker from Canada, John Beattie, who spoke of the goodwill towards Britain still latent in his own country but untapped because of British preoccupation with Europe. John Tyndall ended with a strong denunciation of the treason of the politicians that had railroaded Britain into the EEC and a call for Britain to reassess her strength and independence.

David Bruce took the chair and the collection raised over £260.

Let's make the BNP grow!

DURING the first half of this year the British National Party has made tremendous strides forward in its fight for the cause of race and nation.

A progressive development plan has seen the opening of a BNP Bookshop, with the installation of a 24-hour telephone line. These have brought huge benefits to the party since they were set up in April.

At the same time both Spearhead magazine and the party paper British Nationalist have both been upgraded, and BN extended in size to give the BNP a bigger sales impact and even more popular appeal.

Also on the propaganda front, the BNP sticker range has been expanded to include gummed-back stickers as well as self-adhesive ones, and these have proved tremendously popular.

The distributed quantity of all propaganda materials — papers, leaflets and stickers — has risen dramatically as BNP units and individuals have boosted output of all items, and this work is now paying off with a sharp increase in the number of enquiries received by the party.

The success of the BNP is also being marked by increasingly good attendances at party activities, accompanied by a noticeable increase of attention from the media. Good rallies in the Loughton area have been accompanied by an excellent one at Leicester, followed by two more in Darlington and Dewsbury — the last being the most successful of all, with over 300 present — and hundreds more who would have attended had the police not closed the rally down before they could arrive. The publicity resulting from these two events in the North of England was the greatest the party has ever had. This was followed by further publicity in the London area resulting from a fight in which BNP members thrashed Labour Party bullies at Welling.

All this is very good news for the BNP and reflects the new growth and dynamism in the party. But we should not be complacent.

A look at the map of the country shown here will indicate the major cities and towns. In the cases where the cities and towns are underlined the BNP has organised units. Although we have some very good units around Britain, there are also very many towns in which the BNP has no unit at all!

1989 has been designated as a year of targeted growth for the British National Party, and that means that all units of the party must push very hard. It also means that new units of the party have to be set up and must start to push the nationalist message in every town where at present we have no unit.

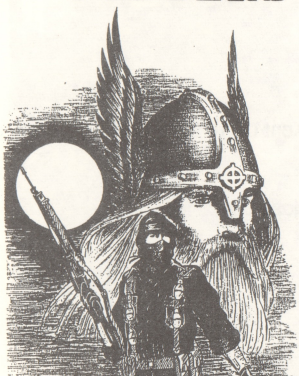

If there is no organised branch of the British National Party in your area, why not start one of your own? If you are in doubt as to how to go about it, just write to our office for guidance and we will help.

The next issue of British Nationalist will see the start of a series of reports looking at the BNP regions, and showing just why the BNP is the biggest and most dynamic nationalist party in Britain today.

LONDON

BNP marches against IRA

THE BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY staged its first march for some considerable time when it paraded through London on Saturday, August 5th, in opposition to the IRA bombers and in support for the loyal people of Ulster.

economy is starting to run into serious trouble, workers and managers are thus once again to be seen squaring up to each other like opposing armies.

Yet this is not by choice of the vast mass of ordinary British working people. Most ask for nothing more than secure employment, decent treatment in their workplace and a fair day's pay for a fair day's work at a stable level of real income. Few have any sympathy with the kind of left-wing militants who exploit often quite legitimate shop-floor grievances for their own revolutionary ends.

If Mrs. Thatcher had ever been serious about reforming Britain's industrial relations, she would have gone out of her way to enlist the wholehearted co-operation of this decent majority of Britain's workers. But this would have involved policies entirely contrary to everything she and the Tories stand for and have been doing.

NEED FOR NATIONALISM

Britain does need a revolution. But it is only from Nationalism, never from Toryism, that this will come. If Britain is to have an efficient and stable economy, with industrial harmony, her industries must be rebuilt behind trade barriers that will exclude imports of those things we can produce at home. British investment capital must be directed into the British economy for Britain's good, not exported to build up her competitors. The banking system must be brought to order, with the state issuing the nation's money, free of debt and interest.

With full employment and an end to inflation, guaranteed by these measures, existing trade unions and employers' associations should be merged into a single national body responsible to government. This will co-ordinate the economy and act as an impartial arbitrator in industrial disputes, its decisions having the force of law.

This is the only way to industrial harmony and prosperity.

EDINBURGH GROUP FORMED

ON THE WEEKEND of Saturday, the 15th and Sunday the 16th July, the Scottish BNP held a highly successful 'Weekend of Action' in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

On the Saturday morning, a 12-man team of activists led by Branch Organiser Stephen Cartwright and supported by activists from London and Australia held a paper sale and leaflet drive in the centre of Glasgow. In the afternoon a meeting was held at a nearby hotel. A crowd of 45 people heard speeches by Andrew Lunt, the Liverpool Organiser, Tony Wells, the Redbridge Organiser and Tom Graham, an expatriate Briton who has spent many years living in Australia. The meeting was ably chaired by Gus McLeod and £93 was raised through literature sales and a collection.

In the evening a video show and social was held at the local Organiser's home.

On Sunday, the 16th, a contingent of activists travelled to Edinburgh to meet with local members there. This proved to be very fruitful, and this month a new Edinburgh Group is being formed.

The day ended with a few beers in the shadow of the magnificent Edinburgh Castle.

To London's eternal shame, a pro-IRA march organised by the 'Troops Out' movement had been allowed to take place in the capital on the same afternoon, and the BNP march was in the way of a counter-demonstration against this outrage.

The peak holiday season, combined with extremely warm and sunny weather on the day, contributed to a turn-out that was not one of the BNP's largest in a year of generally very good attendances. About 100 marched, but the quality of those taking part was mostly very high, and the column made an excellent impression as it wended its way from Smithfield Market along Holborn, down Kingsway and Fleet Street, then up Farringdon Street and back to Smithfield. A brief rally was then held on the market site, with David Bruce, Richard Edmonds and John Tyndall speaking.

Some really excellent publicity resulted from this event. A shot and mention of the march were given on London's local TV news in the evening. In addition, one national TV news bulletin and two newspapers the next morning gave the BNP a mention, although — wrongly — in connection with another demonstration against the 'Troops Out' marchers with which it had no connection! This is perhaps poetic justice, as in the past others have been accredited in media publicity with activities organised by the BNP. All in all, the day's events added just one more score to a great publicity year for the BNP!

The police, no doubt acting on political instructions from high up, made no attempt to move the demonstrators and clear the road. This greatly angered local Whites, who were sorely inconvenienced, and they voiced their annoyance very loudly. The reaction of the demonstrators was to rush to attack them, and when the police got in the way they themselves became the targets of the demonstrators' violence. During the riot that followed several police officers were injured.

What of the news of this clash? Well, apparently local London radio managed a brief mention of the riot in an evening news bulletin — before the curtain of censorship went down. Other than this, the only hint to the British public of what happened is thought to have been restricted to 1½ column-inches in the following morning's Sunday Mirror.

Meanwhile, over in Camden, North West London, there has been another ongoing racial war similar to that in Bradford, and involving mainly young local Whites and Asians. An account of this is to be found on page 3 of this issue. Almost nothing of the trouble, however, has been allowed to receive mention in the national papers or on national TV or radio news reports.

In exposing these facts about racial violence in London and Yorkshire, we are not attempting to make any judgements as to who is at fault — except in those cases where the source of the blame is fairly obvious. Who started the trouble in West Bowling, Bradford, and in Camden seems to be a matter of dispute. But what is not in dispute is that the dream of a multi-racial Britain is fast collapsing, as one outbreak after another demonstrates the utter incompatibility of the different racial groups now in this country.

What is also beyond dispute is that there is a deliberate attempt by the mass media to 'cover-up' many of the incidents that are occurring, desperate as the media controllers are to maintain the illusion that the multi-racial society is working. From the information that is leaking out, however, we know differently. In the future, as in the past, we will bring the facts to our readers as they occur. And we will continue to oppose the lunacy of multi-racialism in this country and call for its only solution: repatriation of the non-white ethnic communities to their ethnic homelands.

- The return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs
- A government that will put British interests first
- British withdrawal from the European Common Market
- Closer links with the White Commonwealth
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from Britain
- A sane financial system that will give to the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce
- The revival of British farming
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources
- A clamp-down on social security spongers and the restoration of the incentive to work — with the proviso that work is locally available
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation
- British support for the Whites in South Africa
- An end to financial aid to corrupt Third World regimes
- The strengthening of Britain's defences
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty
- The smashing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the Loyalist majority in Northern Ireland
- Repealing of the laws permitting Abortion and Homosexuality and a general toughening of legislation against the promotion of obscenity in the media
- The elimination of communism in Britain, in the mass media, in the factory and in the schoolroom
